ABOUT

Daniela is a trial and appellate lawyer with a commitment to service. She generally helps businesses enforce their contracts and families enforce their wills. This commercial and fiduciary law practice has involved disputes with $20K to $20M at issue, on all sides and at every level of the process. She is licensed to practice law in Texas, California, and D.C.

Daniela's objective of serving clients includes attention to being cost-effective and solution-oriented. She thinks strategically before recommending a new phase of litigation. But when appropriate, she has demonstrated success at every phase – from emergency orders, lis pendens, demands, pleadings, motions, hearings, depositions, discovery, settlements, jury trials, to class action and multidistrict litigation. She has tried cases in federal court, state court, and arbitration. Has later enforced or preserved her judgments through collections, bankruptcy, and appellate litigation. And has proactively studied (and spoken on) evolving issues affecting her clients like artificial intelligence and the new Texas Business Court. She finds that fostering relationships across the bench and bar leads to better outcomes and appreciates the opportunity to serve on various local boards.

Before joining the full-service litigation team at GDHM, Daniela had several formative experiences. She worked for Fortune 5 companies at a global, white-shoe law firm. She learned how to think like a judge during federal clerkships (apprenticeships). And she attended Notre Dame Law School, where she was one of 10 students invited to join both Law Review and Moot Court. She was also Co-President of the Hispanic Law

Students Association.

Daniela credits her success and resolve to being a woman of faith and descendant of Bolivian immigrants. She and her husband met about 15 years ago on a fateful bus ride from Barcelona to Madrid. They are raising two spunky girls.
